Clinical laboratory analytics is the systematic evaluation and communication of clinical laboratory testing data to improve healthcare operations and patient outcomes. Most of the data created by a clinical laboratory is already coded and transmitted to electronic health records as discrete elements with meaningful flags, making it more amenable to analysis than text-based clinical histories and pathology reports.

Having strong analytical skills means nothing if you cannot share your analysis with others. You need to be an effective communicator that can explain the patterns you see in the data. Sometimes you will have to explain information orally in a meeting or presentation. Other times, you will have to write a report.
